PEACE TALKS

By Howard Handleman
Far Eastern Director, INS

TOKYO, Aug. 8 —(INS) — The four American members of the Allied truce team flew back to Korea today from Tokyo amid continued Red silence on a demand for a new guarantee of Kaesong's absolute neutrality.

Communist radios had broadcast no response more than 30 hours after Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway messaged the Red high command a warning that one more violation of the conference city's demilitarized status would wreck the talks.

Nevertheless, the return of chief negotiator Vice Adm. Charles Turner Joy and his three American co-delegates to Korea was interpreted as indicating the United Nations Supreme Commander expected an acceptable Communist reply.

No official source, however, would venture a prediction as to when the Reds would answer Ridgway or when, if at all, the Kaesong negotiations would be renewed.

At the UN truce camp near Kaesong, meanwhile, a spokesman shed new light on the Allied-Communist exchange of communications since last Sunday when Ridgway broke off the cease-fire talks.

Brig. Gen. William F. Nuckols, UN deputy chief information officer, said Communist radios had broadcast to Japan a Japanese

THE OLIVER TWIST OF NATIONS

"The master was a fat, healthy man; but he turned very pale . . . The assistants were paralyzed with wonder; the boys with fear. 'What!' said the master at length, in a faint voice.
"'Please, sir,' replied Oliver, 'I want some more.'"
"Oliver Twist," by Charles Dickens.

The tale of the presumtuous Oliver Twist, who dared ask for more gruel in the workhouse, has always been a favorite among the English. Dickens, writing back in the days before governments had elbowed private capital out of the international lending game, had no thought of politics when he penned the lines quoted above. Yet somehow the Dickens characterization fits most aptly the dogged British drive through the past two generations to put the bee on Uncle Sam for enough money to permit the English citizens to enjoy comforts without working for them.

Very few Americans realize the fantastic extent to which, over a period of some thirty-seven years, they have been digging down, down into their own pockets to furnish hand-outs to John Bull.

As a matter of fact, the figures defy tabulation. Even if all the giveaways shipped from this nation to our impecunious English-speaking cousins beyond the seas could be listed and added, the figures would still be misleading and deceptive. Our own dollar has slumped heavily in buying capacity and inherent value, and the British pound has been twice devalued—once automatically by reason of the war, and again artificially, as a tricky way of trying to

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

After a delay of a month, Soviet radios broadcast the text of President Truman's letter of July 7 expressing this country's friendship for the Russian people and of the Congressional resolution stressing the desire for peace. The texts will be broadcast and all Soviet newspapers will publish them today. The Rusian radios also carried the Soviet replies received by the United States yesterday. Washington rejected the Soviet proposal for a five-power peace pact as a "propaganda trap" and advised the Kremlin to honor existing obligations before taking on new ones. The A. F. L. Executive Council called the proposal "a Trojan horse" and "a change of tactics and not of heart."

At least 100,000 youths attending the Communist rally in Berlin sifted into the Western sectors to see the sights and enjoy good, plentiful food.

President Truman urged Congress not to economize at the expense of international organizations and to restore cuts made by the House in United States' contributions to support the United Nations and other world bodies.

Any cut in the Administration's $8,500,000,000 foreign aid program will be made over the protests of General Eisenhower, it was learned. He was said to have told visiting Senators that the total amount asked would be "picayune" when compared with the cost should Europe fall.

A rapid rise in aviation strength to give the Air Force 138 combat and 25 troop-carrier wings and the Navy three super-carriers insted of one was urged by Chairman Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee. The Air Force is expanding from 87 to 95 wings. A new height record for single rockets was set when a Viking rose 135 miles above the White Sands proving grounds.

"Nearly eighty" West Point cadets accused of cheating "admitted guilt under oath," it was officially announced. All will be given a chance to resign or be dismissed.

Five more Communist leaders were arrested on conspiracy charges. The bail of William Schneiderman, acting party head, was cut to $5,000.

Three-Car Accident At Green Lane Intersection

A three car accident occurred at 4.30 yesterday afternoon at the intersection of Green Lane and Route No. 13.

According to Bristol Township Police officers, a sedan operated by William James Hibbs, Jr. 735 Pine street, Bristol, was parked at the "stop" sign at that point, headed west on Green Lane, when a sedan operated by Howard Haschat, 443 Hillcrest avenue, Morrisville, was attempting to make a left turn from Route No. 13 into Green Lane. Another machine travelling north on Route No. 13 operated by Benjamin F. Scott, 327 Crown street, Morrisville, struck Haschat's machine and veered off and struck the Hibbs vehicle.

Considerable damage was reported to the three machines, which had to be towed from the scene.

No injuries were reported. Bristol Township police investigated.

Hammond Iron Works Entered for Second Time

EDGELY, Aug. 8 — For the second time in three months the Hammond Iron Works, has been entered. This time the offices were ransacked. It is believed the ransacking took place between six p. m. Saturday and 10 a. m. Sunday.

According to Bristol Township police officers, entrance was gained by cutting a seven foot cyclone fence, which surrounds the property.

A window was broken in the main office building, five desks ransacked, the lock was hammered off the electrician's tool box, and a chisel from the tool box believed to have been used to hammer a hole in the safe door.

No valuables were reported missing but considerable damage was done to the records. Investigation is being made by Bristol Township Police officers.

Three Pamphlets Are Ready for Distribution

The director, Bucks County Council of Civil Defense, has received for distribution three items printed by the Federal Government, namely: a booklet titled "Emergency Action to Save Lives;" a leaflet titled "First Aid Kit" and a poster titled "Air Raid Instructions."

These items will be turned over to the county superintendent of schools to be carried into the homes by the school children during September.

"The responsibility of protecting the homes (disseminating information being one form of protection) is that of the borough or township civil defense councils; the county civil defense council is charged with the coordination of the local councils," says Col. A. M. Heritage, director.

"If from time to time you do not receive protective information, it is your duty as a citizen to inquire why from your local civil defense council director," it is stated.

What Does It Mean?

(By "The Stroller")

Readers in this area of a national magazine are speculating over a map in an advertisement of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., which shows the location of "Fairless" between Philadelphia and Trenton on the line of the P. R. R.

The speculation is whether the name of the Morrisville station is to be changed to "Fairless," due to the locating of the "Fairless Works," new U. S. Steel plant, in Falls Township.

SEAL APPEARS IN DELAWARE RIVER; SPORTS ON FLOAT

Bristolians Rub Their Eyes In Disbelief at The Strange Visitor

PUTS ON A "SHOW"

Four-Foot Animal, Far From Habitat, Oogles His Unusual "Audience"

Strategy was used to snare a hooded seal shortly before noon today along the Delaware River here.

The "catch" was directed by representatives of the Phila. "zoo", who brought a motor boat and strong hand-nets into play. A few men in the boat edged close to the Elks float from mid-river, attracting the attention of the animal. As the seal eyed the men in the boat, another "zoo" employee carefully made his way down the ramp, and onto the float, net in hand. As he flipped the net over the seal from the rear, he bore down with the net-pole, pinning the seal to the float. There was a cry from the hundreds on the bank, street, porches and in windows, as the seal made a rush for the bank-side of the float. The captor bore down hard, but over the edge went part of Mr. Seal's body, pointing toward the water. Others on the boat rushed to the captor's aid, and held tight. Strong straps were pulled about the seal's head, and hind flippers.

Several men carried him to the Elk's lawn, and although difficulty was experienced in getting the seal into the box, it was finally accomplished and the box loaded onto the "zoo" truck.

A lone seal—far from home—put on a show along the Delaware river this morning for a mixed audience. Which was the more unusual—the performer or the audience—is a moot question.

For no one in this section can recall seeing a seal in the Delaware at this point before. And probably a seal could not recall having in his "audience" people in all type of costumes—some neatly dressed enroute to their day's employment or bound for an outing, others in scant house attire on a mucky morning.

BARRICADES MARK ROAD TO "DEAD END"

State Police Take Additional Steps To Prevent Accidents

AMPLE WARNINGS

LANGHORNE, Aug. 8 — Two barricades have been erected on the super highway here, in an attempt to prevent accidents at the super highway "dead-end" east of this borough.

One barricade is at the intersection of Bellevue avenue, the sign bearing an arrow pointing toward Penndel, with the words "Trenton-New York".

The second barricade is located some distance east of this point. The two were erected on Friday.

The placing of the barricades is an additional effort on the part of State Police to halt the ever increasing number of accidents at the "dead-end" where one person was killed and 11 persons injured in 6½ months.

The highway has always been plainly marked, but despite the number of warning signs motorists continued to speed toward the "dead-end" with accidents as the result.

This section of roadway is not the direct route to Trenton, N. J., and New York, N. Y., as the Lincoln highway bears right west of Parkland, and signs so indicate. Ample warning signs are displayed, and police are of the opinion that the highway is well-marked. Large signs are displayed at the intersection of the super-highway with the Lincoln highway west of Parkland. One reads "Keep right", indicating the direction of the Lincoln highway. It is also indicated in large letters that the route to the right leads to New York. Another sign with an arrow points left to Langhorne.

If, however, a motorist continues

AWARD 2 CONTRACTS

Insurance on School Properties Is To Be Greatly Increased

Resignations from two members of the teaching faculty, granting of equivalent credit for masters degrees, awarding of fuel oil and coal contracts were among the business transacted by the Bristol School Board, last evening. Mrs. H. Richard Giordano, newly appointed member of the board, to fill the vacancy due to the resignation of her husband, Dr. H. Richard Giordano, attended her first meeting last evening. There are now two women members of the board, the other being Mrs. William Harding.

The session was held in the high school building and John Dougherty, president, presided. All members were present except George Perkins.

John Schwartz tendered his resignation as teacher of industrial arts and Dallas John resigned as machine shop instructor. Both resignations were accepted with regret.

BASEBALL'S MONOPOLISTS

No doubt it was inevitable that Congress should get around ultimately to investigating baseball. And if the House judiciary subcommittee goes about it in the right way, it's an inquiry that could clear up things that are more mystifying than the Giants' pitching staff.

First of all, the subcommittee ought to find out what the St. Louis Browns are doing in the American League. From there the inquiry should proceed to another matter that has baffled grandstand managers the country over, namely: Why do the White Sox insist on pitching to Boston's Clyde Vollmer with first base open?

And no investigation would be complete unless it reveals what Brooklyn's got, besides Roe, Newcombe, Hodges, Snider, Furillo and Robinson that Leo Durocher hasn't got.

But Representative Celler of New York, chairman of the subcommittee, ignores these vital issues. Instead he wants to find out whether baseball players are peons, whether baseball violates the antitrust laws, and whether the fine print in contracts is inimical to the players' best interest.

It should require no congressional inquiry to establish the indisputable fact that there is a baseball monopoly. The subcommittee needs to look no further than the New York Yankees. The Yankee cartel has been notorious for years, as any impartial judge in Boston, Phila. or Chicago can testify.

FILL THE OIL TANK

The average householder can generally be made to admit that he has grasshopper tendencies. On winter week-ends he ought to be painting the screens, building or fixing new shelves in the cellar, cleaning the garage, and so forth, but he rarely is engaged in such activities.

In summer, when he ought to be getting in fuel oil or coal, painting the storm windows, looking after insulation, he can find dozens of reasons for postponing these chores.

The plea made by oil executives for fuel stockpiling this summer may help push a number of borderline grasshopper cases over into the ant category. But the reasoning behind the plea is of utmost seriousness. Because of a transportation situation, there may be rationing of fuel oil stocks in various areas next winter. The paradox is that it will be a case of rationing in the midst of plenty, but that's beside the point.

Seagoing tanker hold space is scarce and getting scarcer, with many factors contributing to make it so. A vast rearrangement in the normal flow of oil along global shipping routes—of which the Iranian situation is but one factor—is throwing a greater burden than ever on the U. S. tanker fleet.

The premise that it is always possible to fall back on naval tankers is a fallacy because of the need of overseas fuel for a fast-expanding fleet. Coastwise fuel barge and tank car potential is dwindling, or isn't there at all, depending on the geographic location.

"WASHINGTON REPORT"

By FULTON LEWIS, JR.

(Copyright, 1951 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

By Oscar L. Chapman
Secretary of the Interior

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8 — In many vital defense areas of the United States one of the most pressing but little heralded problems is water. New York city's water shortage of last spring and summer has excited nationwide attention, but it is not generally recognized that water shortages of equal or greater severity are facing many other areas which are critically important in our preparedness drive.

In some sections of California, the southwest, Ohio, and New England shortages of water are blocking needed defense expansion. We should be warned, in fact, that unless broad action is taken, almost all the major cities of the United States—the muscles of our defense economy — face eventual water shortages.

What has happened? Is the United States really running short of water?

Part of the answer to these questions lies in the spectacular increase in our use of water in the first half of this century. In 1850 there were only 83 public water supply systems in operation in the United States and only a few homes were connected with city mains. Today nearly every urban home is served with city water. Our use of water is prodigious compared to our former standards or to the limits still observed in western Europe. Average per-capita use of water from public mains is estimated at 145 gallons a day, as compared to the 25-gallon standard of the continent. Some of us, with our 20-gallon morning showers and our 100-gallon daily laundries, use as much as 300 gallons daily.

Water is also being used as never before to irrigate our farm lands—about 80 billion gallons daily. About 25 million acres of semiarid land, mostly in our 17 western states, are blooming as the result of our great irrigation projects. We are using water extensively for street cleaning, fire protection, and the production of electric power. Air conditioning is taking great draughts. But our most astounding increase in water requirements has been registered in our industries which are gulping over 75 billion gallons every day, about as much as is used for irrigation. Total use of water for all purposes has now reached close to the enormous peak of 200 billion gallons a day—up several tens of billions from 1940—and the ultimate demand for water in our growing nation is not yet in sight.

To be sure that we will have enough water when and where we need it for our defense program, we must take advantage of all the supplies that nature has provided and tax our ingenuity in developing new sources. If we were able to intercept and use all of the water which nature provides us through rainfall each year, we would have no water problems. Our annual rainfall is sufficient to cover our entire land area to a depth of 30 inches. The catch is, however, that we lose such tremendous quantities through evaporation and unintercepted runoffs that less than one inch of our total rainfall is used.

In order to prepare for defense-inspired demand on our water resources, we need to build additional reservoirs in many areas to conserve flood waters and spread the supply over lean periods. In some regions, however, the water problem cannot be completely solved even by extremely extensive reservoir systems. Ground water, collected in underground water-bearing formations, should be explored and developed as an additional source. Heavy industrial and irrigation demands in some areas are severely straining even underground water reserves, however, and the problems and huge costs of developing surface and ground water resources make it necessary to promote other potential sources.

California researchers, for example, are undertaking intensive studies to find a practical method of desalting sea water in huge quantities, thus providing a potentially inexhaustible source of fresh water. The Pacific ocean, many of these experts believe, may prove to be the west's last—and best—water hole.

We can desalt sea water on a relatively large scale today. During World War II we distilled huge quantities to meet the needs of our GI's in the Pacific. When World War II ended, we had sufficient equipment on hand to distill enough fresh water from the sea to supply the daily needs of a million men.

The problem, however, is to desalt sea water at practical costs. Present methods generally cost from 55 cents to $1.50 per 1,000 gallons, for fuel alone, although new vapor-compression stills are reported to have reduced fuel costs to as little as 20 to 30 cents per 1,000 gallons. These costs are not yet competitive with other sources of supply except in unusually critical areas.

Legislation is now being considered by congress for intensive research in methods of producing fresh water from salt water, as well as rainmaking. These and other potential solutions to our water problems should be fully explored. Since it generally takes from two to five years to develop new local water supplies, the urgency of attacking our water problems quickly is sharply underlined. If our nation is to remain secure against the threat of communist aggression, we can no longer delay the bold steps needed to cope with our looming water crisis. To wait until our wells run dry would be a short - sighted policy even under normal conditions. In the present emergency, it could spell disaster.

and one little fellow still in his pajamas.

Young Mr. Seal—about five feet long—seemed to enjoy the attention. He raised up on his flippers, on the float at the Elks' home, moved his head from side to side to oogle the small group gathered at the foot of Walnut street, rolled over on his back as if to invite anyone interested to scratch his belly, and made occasional dives into the water. While having his picture taken he showed a cooperative spirit as he was coaxed to pose this way or that.

Ralph Ratcliffe contacted Fred Ulmer at the Philadelphia Zoological Gardens, and discussed the matter with him. Ulmer's suggestion was that a guard be placed to prevent the crowd from getting too close and scaring the seal away entirely. Fire Chief Clifford Hagerman, Sr., was placed in charge of this project, keeping individuals from the Elks home lawn. A truck was immediately dispatched from the "zoo" to take the animal there.

He was apparently first seen by George Bailey, Jr., who was engaged in some electrical work at the Farmers National Bank of Bucks County. Mr. Bailey saw the fairly large object moving quietly through the water. Whether he rubbed his eyes more than once hasn't been determined, but he continued to watch the animal's progress, until it reached the Elks' float, and slowly and laboriously climbed "top-side." Mr. Bailey blinked in earnest when he saw that he had spotted a seal. He called attention of employees at Bristol Water Works to the visitor. "There's a seal on the Elks' wharf," he informed. "Quit your kidding!" he was told, the water works men never having seen nor heard of a seal in Bristol waters. But they were finally induced to take a "gander" float-wise. The limp, unmoving gray mass appeared from the distance to be a pile of tarpaulin, and the water works employees were just about to dismiss it as one of Bailey's little jokes, when the "tarpaulin" moved.

And sure enough—there flipped Mr. Seal, all five feet of him, with smooth gray-brown back, and light "undercarriage."

He wiggled from one end of the float to another, eyed each newcomer who looked in disbelief, and showed off in general.

Telephones buzzed, as one individual eagerly informed another of the phenomena.

Mrs. John Wichser, Dorrance street, decided to give Mr. Seal some breakfast, providing a diet of fish, but the recipient refused to eat it. This was just as officials at the "zoo" had predicted—they suggested that no food be offered it as they claimed it would possibly be frightened by persons getting too close when the crowd swelled.

The hooded seal comes from Greenland. Seals whelp in the spring. This one was possibly whelped last year.

The one discovered here this morning is of the type sealers kill on the ice pan for skins (leather) blubber and oil.

About 15 years ago one was caught at Florence, N. J. A man there was getting driftwood from the river and saw an animal in the water, hit it on the head with an oar and hauled it into his boat. The same size as the one seen here, he put it in a bathtub in his back yard and charged 10c admission to see the "two tailed" monster. Taken to Phila. "zoo" that seal died six weeks later.

This morning, on the banks of the Delaware at Bristol, one small boy yelled to the seal, "You better jump before you land in the zoo."

Smith, building inspector, listed 43 building permits issued during the month of July with a total of $745.76 received in fees.

James Harris brought up subject of traffic violation tickets. He stated the police and police committee feels that the tickets should be revised and printed in triplicate, so there will be a copy for the police, one for the commissioners and one for the operator of the car. This question was discussed and the commissioners decided to have the tickets revised and printed in triplicate and numbered.

The question of a planning commission was discussed and most of the commissioners felt that something should be done and it would have to be done soon. They decided to name a planning commission and appointed Walter G. Rittler as chairman. The other members of the committee will be announced later.

dig some extra change out of the pocketbooks of the American people.

Our serious efforts to underwrite the British government go back to the early stages of the First World War. Our government made a series of war-loans to the British government, which was all to the good, and at the time seemed like a simple, business-type operation. We did the same for most of the other nations of Europe which were outside the German Axis.

But after the war, the proposition was built up, so skilfully, that we had gained more than the British had in beating back the German threat upon the Tight Little Isle, and that we therefore ought to kiss off the war debt. It presently developed that the only country in all the world which seriously intended to repay the war debt was Finland, and it is to our everlasting shame that we treacherously rewarded Finland for her honesty by turning her over to the tender "tutelage" of Russia after the Second World War.

The British didn't pay back enough on the war debt to keep up the interest. When it was finally wiped off the books by cancellation, it was bigger than at the end of the war itself.

Between the wars, England toyed around on the fringes of socialism. Having found how easy it was to put the arm on a well-to-do and unsuspicious nation like this, the British government made very little serious effort to stabilize its own economy. When Chamberlain, the umbrella man, finally walked out on the mess which his appeasement had produced, and turned the reins over to Churchill, it was found that England had wasted the substance of her people without preparing for the conflict which was about to engulf her.

Again Uncle Sam came to the aid of Great Britain. We came mainly by lend-lease, but there was fantastically great aid in other directions which no one, to our knowledge, has ever tried to tabulate.

For instance, how can you figure the precise economic value to Great Britain of our military concentrations during the build-up for the European Invasion? Thousands of British subjects were given civilian jobs on a scale of wages far higher than anything known elsewhere in England. The American soldiers and the associated civilian employees of the military, state and other department, spent a large part of their salaries in England. How much? Who can tell!

With the end of the war, lend-lease was terminated suddenly. Towards the close of hostilities, a good deal of the lend-lease money was spent deliberately for commodities which had virtually nothing to do with the war itself, and much to do with reconversion. In other words, far from all of lend-lease went for articles valuable only in war. But how much of it directly helped the British people, how much of it supplied them with luxuries which their own enterprise was not earning for them, are questions which defy answer.

After the war was ended, and after the Labor Socialists had persuaded the British people to throw their wartime savior, Winston Churchill, out of office as their token of appreciation for saving them from the Germans, the build-up began for the British "loan"—the three and three-quarters billion dollar donation which was battled so long in Congress. What the British did with this, once it was sewed up, was to reduce their own taxes substantially, and use the American gift as a means of putting their "cradle-to-grave" program of government giveaways into operation.

Later, as everybody knows, there was the Marshall Plan, or ECA, of which England received an estimated $10 billion.

But meanwhile the American handouts continued in other more skilfully hidden methods.

For instance, England was presented with an uncountable amount in war surplus which happened to be in that country when the war ended, or was in some other location which made it easy to slip it into their hands. Any figures attempting to estimate the value of such gifts are wholly unreliable, since the surplus commodities were mostly all marked down to preposterously low values when peace returned, despite the fact that much of it, such as trucks, was quite as valuable for peacetime as in war.

Again, during the post-war years, our military establishment had the spending of uncountable billions, much of it appropriated with the idea of maintaining our military strength, but actually used for the purpose of buying up crop and industrial surplusses in this country, to keep prices high and preserve the illusion of a "boom."

The Truman administration has never volunteered a factual report on these activities, and Congress has never insisted on it. As a matter of fact, the Truman administration stopped the issuance of the one set of figures out of which the disposal of the army purchases might be traced — the foreign trade statistics, the most revealing of which were discontinued in 1948.

But regardless of the exact amount, the English people and government got the benefit of huge hidden spending of this sort.

Or to name another example of concealed financial aid to the British people, for which the American population paid whether it knew it or not, Great Britain benefitted from UNRRA, "Un-Rah," that scandalous postwar boon-doggle which ladled out uncountable billions without anyone ever tracing where it all went. The figures on UNRRA don't tell the whole story. As a single example, when it came to bonding the agency's thousands of employees, this "plum" was awarded to the British, instead of being handled in this country or being underwritten by our own government.

Another concealed donation which the American people have been making to the British is in the field of tariffs. Ever since Roosevelt and Hull took over the command of foreign trade, and, without daring to repeal the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, nevertheless decided to riddle it with the Trade Agreements program, we have been admitting British-made goods below the safe level of protection — admitting them at prices which have cut deep into certain fields of American manufacture.

It was to increase this spread that the British revalued their pound. Regardless of how one states the matter, the fact is that whatever the British have sold in this country, along lines where we ourselves have plants producing comparable goods, has been just that much earnings taken away from American investors and American working people.

And now, like Oliver Twist, Great Britain is coming back again, its little bowl in its little hand, and crying for "more!"

And meanwhile Great Britain, in its own government, has repudiated everything that our own government, our traditions and our Constitution, stand for; and in its foreign policy, had adopted a course of appeasing the very tyrants who, to us, represent the great unsolved threat against the future peace of the world.

Camp "Merry Woods" Has A Very Successful Season

ANDALUSIA, Aug. 8 — "Camp Merry Woods" is the name given by summer day campers to the Scout camp site located on State road in Andalusia, here, for eight days. During their stay, the girls filled the woods with happy chatter, songs and Indian calls as well as delicious odors of out-door cooking.

The girls learned that selecting the proper kind and size of wood and the actual lighting of the fire are just as important to Girl Scouts as the results of a properly-cooked lunch. Sometimes it would be a one-pot meal, with contributions by each girl, or perhaps pancakes where each girl would flip her own.

Activities including crafts and nature "snoops" are backed by the idea of teaching the girls to live happily in a group.

Among the highlights of the season was visitor's day, when each unit put on a short skit for the enjoyment of mothers, fathers and friends. A puppet show, telling the Brownie story, was given by members of the oldest unit to the campers and guests. The girls made the hand puppets from small paper bags with faces painted to represent different characters in the story.

"Take home" treasures included hand-painted tiles, plaster of paris name pins, "bug cages", woven baskets, and Indian head bands made by some girls who participated in an Indian dance.

The camp was directed by Mrs. William H. Rever, and the unit leaders were: Mrs. J. Stanley VanSant, Mrs. William Ervin, Mrs. James Doneker, Mrs. Charles Carey, Mrs. William Kisters, Mrs. Charles Henty, Mrs. Henry Briel, Mrs. Harry Schmidt, Mrs. Chester Fiorianti, Mrs Alexander Boag, Mrs. Robert Hoff and Mrs. Roland Fryling. The nurse was Mrs. Alex Dean.

"Draw nigh unto God and He will draw night unto you" James 4:8

So often I do not feel Thee near, Oh Lord. The details of my business, my pleasures, and my family life seem to crowd Thee out. As I come to Thee in faith—trusting and believing—I find Thee near. The walls separating us fall away. I find guidance and strength for my business; joy and happiness in innocent pleasures; and love and purpose for my family life.

Representatives of Four Model Clubs Assemble

A meeting of the Bucks County Federation of Model Clubs was held on Monday evening at the home of Aeromodeleers member Albert Abrams. Representatives of Perkasie Flying Hornets, Quakertown Kiwanis Aero Jockeys, Hatboro Aeromodeleers and Bristol Aeromodeleers were present. Matthew Sullivan, Phila., was the guest speaker.

Plans for all of the clubs to attend the model aircraft contest at Lancaster on Sunday were made. Some of the members will act as officials and judges, but most of them plan to compete in various events. Since the federation is the chief promoter of the new team racing type model event it was voted that this organization agree to furnish any sponsors with sufficient timing and judging personnel to conduct such an event.

A decision to conduct a Bucks County team racing meet at Quakertown on September 16, was reached. Plans for holding the next contest for members of Bucks County Clubs only, at Perkasie, on Aug. 19th, were made. This meet will have standard speed, stunt and hand launched glider events.

Refreshments were served.

Salt Comes Last

In broiling meat remember to salt it after it is browned. Seasoning the meat at this time rather than before cooking is recommended because salt tends to draw the juices out of the meat and retard the browning process.

5TH WARD BATTLES 2ND WARDERS TO A TIE SCORE OF 2 TO 2

Fifth Ward and Second Ward battled to a 2-2 deadlock in a Bristol Softball League game last evening on Memorial softball field. The game was called at the beginning of the eighth because of darkness.

A perfect throw to the plate by Frank Rich stopped the Fifth Ward team from winning the tilt in the last half of the seventh. With two out, "Smitters" Cordisco lined a double along the left field foul line. Joe Embiscuso dumped a single to left and Rich's throw to Nate Chichiletti got Cordisco sliding into the plate.

The opposing pitchers for the hard-fought game were Stanley "Butch" Koreyva for Fifth Ward and Charles "Chick" Stansky, for Second Ward. Fifth Ward made six hits while Second Ward came up with five. However, most of the hits in the contest were of the scratch variety.

Joe Pica had two of the Fifth Ward hits. One of these was a long triple to left center, scoring Koreyva and Gordon Fahey in the third inning. Nate Chichiletti had two of Second Ward's hits.

Both of Second Ward's tallies were scored as the results of errors by Partyka. On both occasions, Partyka dropped the third strike on the batter while Koreyva had the batter out. Koreyva had 10 strikeouts.

HOME RUNS HELP TIGERS TO STOP HAWKS

Home runs by Hollibough and Worthington helped the Terrace Tigers to halt the six-game winning streak of the Hawks last evening on Memorial Park baseball field. Final score of the Bristol Boys League game was: Tigers, 8; Hawks, 6.

The defeat dropped the Hawks into a deadlock with the Eagles for first place, each having won six and lost three.

Charlie Young, the winning moundsman had 15 strikeouts while Johnny Bonner whiffed 12. Both pitchers allowed eight hits.

The four-base knocks by Hollibough and Worthington came with a runner on base each time.

Signs start several hundred feet before he reaches the cinder pile at the dead-end into which so many motorists have plowed. The first sign measures about four feet square and reads "Slow"; a hundred feet beyond is a sign indicating junction of Penna. Route 213, with arrow showing that this route crosses; another hundred feet beyond is a sign, five feet square, reading "Dead End 500 Feet Ahead"; then 150 feet from the dead-end is a sign saying "Stop Sign Ahead"; and at the end of the route is the usual "Stop" sign.

translation of Monday's Red message to Ridgway.

This version, Nuckols revealed, was "peremptory" in contrast to the rather "conciliatory" tone of English and Chinese translations aired by the Red radio stations.

From the armistice base Cecil Brownlow, International News Service correspondent, reported that "many observers" believe Ridgway's Tuesday reply to the North Korean-Chinese high command was prompted by the wording of the Japanese translation.

In his message to North Korean Gen. Kim Il Sung and Chinese Gen. Peng Teh-Huai, the UN top commander said he "noted that you describe" such incidents as Saturday's Red infringement of Kaesong's neutrality as "minor, accidental and trivial."

However, the words "minor" and "trivial" do not occur in English and Chinese translations of the message to Ridgway from Kim and Peng, as aired over Red radios.

Questioned about Nuckols' statement, Brig. Gen. Frank Allen, chief information officer at Ridgway's Tokyo UN headquarters, replied that the words "minor" and "trivial" were included in one of the versions broadcast by the Reds.

"As far as I know," he said, "They were used in one of the translations—which one I don't know."

Other headquarters sources declined to say whether Ridgway had used the Japanese translation in drafting his Tuesday reply, rejecting the Communist apology for the movement of a company of Red soldiers within sight of the Kaesong conference house Saturday.

Nor would they say whether the wording of the Japanese-language version was the reason for the UN supreme commander's stern message to Kim and Peng on Tuesday.

The English and Chinese translations, as broadcast by the Reds, quoted Kim and Peng as having told Ridgway Red troops entered Kaesong Saturday "by mistake . . . in violation of our agreement." They referred to such occurrences as "accidents."

Ridgway notified the Reds he would resume the truce talks only on condition of "complete compliance with your guarantees" of Kaesong's neutrality. He warned that another Red violation would be construed as "a deliberate move on your part to terminate" the negotiations.

Brownlow quoted Nuckols as saying the Japanese transcript of Monday's Red note, as beamed to Japan, might be another step in the propaganda drive by the Communists to convince Asiatics that they are the "victors" in the Korean war.

The spokesman said that, if the Red high command makes a satisfactory reply to Ridgway, there would probably be three administrative steps taken before the Kaesong conference is resumed. These are:

1. Instructions from Ridgway, ordering his delegates to take measures for renewal of the talks.

2. Suggestions on date and time for the next meeting, which would be relayed to the Reds at Kaesong by liason officer or radio-telephone.

3. Acceptance of these suggestions by the Communists.

Nuckols said the UN delegates were "completely non-commital" on questions pertaining to the possible reopening of the talks which have been suspended four days.

The spokesman said the negotiators are at the truce camp awaiting orders from Ridgway "whom they represent."

The four American delegates landed on the camp's paddy field strip at 12.55 p. m., Wednesday, having helicoptered up from Seoul's Kimpo airdrome where they arrived in a transport plane from Tokyo. They had conferred with Ridgway during their two-day sojourn in Tokyo.

At the Korean armistice base the four American negotiators rejoined the fifth member of the UN delegation, South Korean Gen. Paik Sun Yup who had remained in Korea.
